Captain Joseph Comstock, a well known mariner living in Seattle, spent almost the entire summer at Cape North was not to hunt for sold, and, though he spent two months on the New York. June 23.—A curious case of appendicitis is reported from Huster by North years ago. His mission to Nome beaches and wandered up and down over the yellow beds that have since been found to be phenomenally rich, not a sign of gold did he see, nor did he hear a word uttered by the Indians that would lead him to believe it was different in that respect from a country that never produced an ounce of gold.

Men Who Let Fortune Slip.

OPPORTUNITIES THEY LOST

A Trio Who Might Have Been Millionaires Had They Known When to Invest.

NEW YORK, June 15 .- News was re ceived in this cay yesterday that McKe-Rankin is going to return here and try to make a new start in life. It is say he hopes to get backing to secure som small theater and will put on a stock company in standard drama.

This has set the gossips of the Alle; talking, and much concerning Mr. Ran kin, both of truth and fiction, has been told; but perhaps the most interesting o all is how he lost a fortune when it was offered to him practically for nothing.

It was back in 1877, and McKee Ranki was then in the zenith of his success. He was a star of a powerful drawing force and he was supposed to be worth a for tune. In ract, he did have considerable money stowed away, but he was a high liver and got through more than the av erage millionaire would dream of doing His apartments at the Fifth Avenue Ho tel cost him $50 a day, and he opened wine for all who would drink it with him He gave away and squandered big sums and it was estimated by his friends tha his personal expenses ran close to $1,00 a week.

This was when he was starring in "Th Danites," and his check in those days would have been accepted anywhere fo at was when Westinghouse, the invent-or, was almost unknown. He had par-ents of eng.nes, motors, airbrakes and many other things. He had started to manufacture in Fittsburg, and a combi-nation had been formed against aim. He was at the end of his resources, was almost to the wall, and did not know who to do. He needed ready money baday and at last came to New York to look

He knew Mr. Rankin well, and after h and value tried Wall street he met Mr tankin in the cafe of the Fifth Avenue

The actor purchased wine for the in-ventor and listened to his plaint of wor with sympathy, and at last Mr. Westinghouse said:

"You've got money. I need it. I'll tell you what I'll do. You put up $5,000 and I'll give you haif interest in all my inventons present and future. I can go on and push them as I cannot do now. What do you say?"

"No," was the reply. "I don't think much of the airbrakes or other inventions. The stage is enough for me. I don't want to get into business of any sort. I'm sorry, my loy. I guess I won't do it. Let's have another bottle and stop talking shop." use went ahead and made westingnoise with the second of the millions. McKee Rankin spent what are had. He is today a very poor man.

This recalls another man who threw away an enormous fortune which he might have had for the taking. It was might have had for the taking. It was Tom McGuire, the theatrical manager of San Francisco, and it happened about the same time as the refusal of Mr. Rankin, Mr. McGuire was worth hundreds of thousands of deliars. He spent money more lavishly than any prince. He also gambled largely and he often won or loss as high as $10,000 or $50,000 on a night's play. One day certain men came to him, among them Leland Stanford, and offered him a one-fourth interest in a new railroad they were working on. It was the Central Pacific. McGuire would or railroad they were working on. It was the Central Pacific, McGuire would or-linarily have lent them the money, even if he did not himself care to invest the 80,000 they asked for. He was not feeling well that day, so he curtly refused the offer.

That night he went out to a gambling resort and lest $25,000 in four hours' play. His share of the railroad, which would have cost him $5,000 less than his night's pleasure, would have made him wealthy for life, but he let the chance go by.

Still another case of this sort, which was told yesterday, was concerning another theatrical manager of the Coastand who was often mistaken for the other Magnire. It also happen. Haw. Govt. Percent.

Thus these three men let fortune call upon them and walk away again without a welcome, and thus they were unwittingly refusing the money and ease for which all three were striving.
